

Our friend Ian Miller, who generates so many devastating charts, had rather an amusing comment about the one below.

Below is Gibraltar, the most vaccinated place on Earth. The vaccination rate is given as 100 percent.

Gibraltar has had only a handful of deaths from the very beginning, long before any vaccines existed.

But if you were still doubtful about whether the vaccines stopped transmission (and I had several people email me yesterday to tell me that their friends genuinely believe that the vaccines do this, or at least slow it significantly), here is Gibraltar. (The orange line tracks the vaccination rate.)

(Oranssi viiva kuvaa rokotettuja, musta tartuntoja.)

Commenting on this graph, Ian said: "I wonder if the like, one unvaccinated guy in the whole country is sitting there going, 'how can this possibly be a pandemic of just me?!'"

Ian Miller kommentoi kaaviokuva: miettiiköhän se suurin piirtein yksi rokottamaton henkilö koko maassa, kuinka tämä voi olla pandemia, jossa olen vain minä?!

Tämä viittaa siihen, että valtamedian narratiivin mukaan nykyinen "pandemia" on rokottamattomien pandemia.
