

Well, Steven Crowder is out with another video that embarrasses a public official, and this one is so over the top you almost can't believe it's real.

Dr. Jay Varma, who ran the New York City Covid response for then-Mayor Bill de Blasio for a year and a half, told an undercover reporter that during that time he and others engaged in drug-fueled sex parties -- as other people watched their relatives die alone.

Every morning at 10:00am, for a year and a half, Dr. Varma sat next to the mayor for a daily press conference.

In fact, Dr. Varma reports that he "was the one who convinced the mayor to make [the Covid shots] a mandate."

"It's so funny, because I did like all this deviant sexual stuff while I was on TV," he recalls.

Had New Yorkers found out he was having "sex parties during Covid," he admitted it would have been a "big deal" and "a real embarrassment."

Yeah, you could say that.

"My wife and I had one with our friends in August of that first summer. It wasn't so much sex as like, 'I need to get this energy out of me' and stuff like that....

"So we rented a hotel. We had to be kind of sneaky about it because hotels didn't want people gathering there."

(You will be relieved to know that everyone had had a Covid test.)

"And it was fun! We all took like, you know, molly [Ecstasy/MDMA]... and everybody had a blast."

Then he gives details of a wild 200-person party in the first half of 2021 that was "not Covid-friendly" where everyone was high -- at a time when the rules were allowed to participate in gatherings of no more than 50.

The whole thing is bizarre. He takes glee in, and is excited about, telling the undercover reporter that the Wall Street Journal wrote a whole article about him being the one person responsible for why Kyrie Irving, who declined the shots, had not been allowed to play basketball.

He is very open: people are too stupid to make decisions, so we have to make them for them. Education is not going to persuade them. The education is so that after they finally give in and get the shots, they can comfort themselves with, "Well, I've heard it's safe and I guess it was the right thing after all."

"The way we do it in public health," he said, "is we make it very uncomfortable to be unvaccinated.... They didn't get vaccinated because they heard it was safe; they gave in because it was really hard."

Now Crowder's point in releasing this video isn't so much to say this man is a hypocrite.

His point instead is to say: these people manifestly did not fear the thing they energetically urged you to fear.

Nobody wants to hear about creepy Jay Varma and his sex parties. But for obvious reasons, they are a very telling and important part of the history of New York City in 2020-2021, and when the court historians tell the story of those years they will be (as usual) willfully deceiving people by leaving them out.
