

Here we go, courtesy of the great Ian Miller (@ianmSC on Twitter).

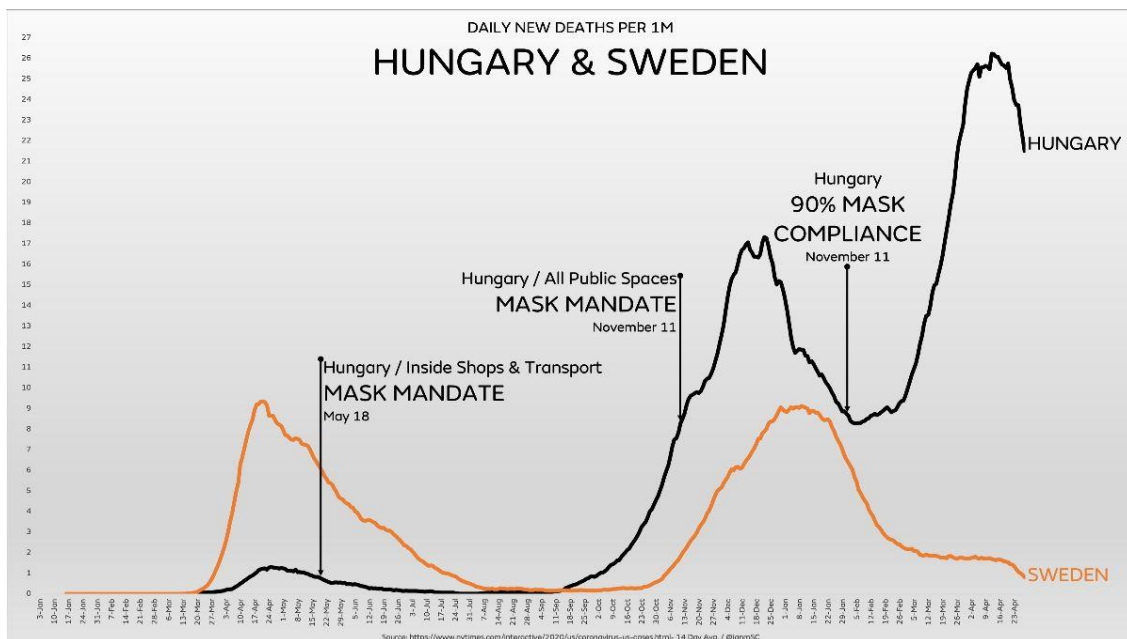

Let's start with California and Texas. Remember when Gavin Newsom, governor of California, described the decision to drop the Texas mask mandate as "absolutely reckless," and then continued with his own crazy policies of closing even outdoor dining and then had similar or worse results than Texas for seven weeks? I'm sure this was all over the news, right?

Let's shift to Iowa. Remember the Washington Post's headline, "Welcome to Iowa, a State That Doesn't Care If You Live or Die"? Deaths are down 91.4% since then:

This one involves heavily masked Hungary against sparsely masked Sweden. Shouldn't these numbers be reversed?

As usual, no clear pro-Fauci story emerges from the charts -- as it darn well should if all the craziness and sacrifice had been genuinely necessary.
